Chartered dreams on the Aqua Luna

Possibly the last hand-crafted wooden junk to be made in Hong Kong, the Aqua Luna represents the higher end of charter possibilities. With its rich history, lush Chinese-inspired furnishings and detailed wooden flourishes, there are few better ways to welcome VIPs to the city. The 140-squaremetre space is divided into two decks: a covered space with glass windows downstairs, and an open-air deck with loungers upstairs.

Its newly launched counterpart, Aqua Luna II, is a traditional Chinese junk decorated with a blue and white dragon, a style often found on Ming-dynasty porcelain. The 29-metre-long boat can accommodate up to 80 guests on its two decks, making it ideal for corporate events. The vessel is the younger but larger brother to the iconic red-sailed junk Aqua Luna, which was launched a decade ago.

Flexibility is the key to this junk’s appeal; large groups can charter the entire boat for day trips to the scenic Aberdeen Harbour or seaside village of Stanley, while smaller groups can take part in one of the regular, scheduled journeys. The junk has a full bar and cocktail lounge, making it a perfect partner for exclusive private cruises and buffet dinners catered for by the highly regarded Aqua Restaurant Group.

Contemporary art curated in the historical pawn

The Pawn is a restaurant housed inside a restored nineteenth century building, spread over three storeys. Launched in 2008, it quickly earned a reputation as a favourite destination for locals and has become a “must-see” for tourists. The restaurant serves a mix of modern British classics by celebrity chef Tom Aikens.

Located on the first floor of The Pawn’s three-storey building, Botanicals Bar is a stylish and creative hub nestled in the heart of Hong Kong. Entering via a charming set of narrow stairs, guests are welcomed by the greenery of hundreds of potted plants and artwork by local artists adorning the backdrop. The layout is divided into several sections, with one being a concealed bar table area resembling a chic private club, decked in leather couches and dark wood panels evoking an old-world charm.

AMMO

Luxurious industrialism at AMMO

AMMO is a multi-award winning restaurant located in the stunning heritage site of a former 19th century explosives compound. It specialises in handmade pasta freshly prepared in house every day using organic Italian eggs.

AMMO’s cinematic interiors were created by Joyce Wang of Wang Studios who took inspiration from the 1965 film noir masterpiece, Alphaville. The use of copper throughout the interior is at once luxurious and industrial while referencing the site’s military past. The result is a surreal yet modern space nestled within the jungle that feels a world away from the bustle of the city, ideal for corporate dinners, cocktail receptions and events.
